Remind Me to Tell You

A History of Major Harry J. Fleeger And His Friends, POWS of the Japanese

by

John H. Bradley

Based on the letters and cryptic war diaries of Major Harry Fleeger, this book provides a poignant insight into the impact of war and imprisonment on an American soldier.

Major Fleeger graduated from the U. S. Military Academy in 1931, became a skilled horse cavalry officer, deployed to the Philippines in 1940, and joined the 26th U. S. Cavalry Regiment, Philippine Scouts.

Part war story, part love story, the gripping narrative covers Fleeger's pre-war life on Luzon, his recounting of the combat operations of the 26th Cavalry (PS) on Luzon and Bataan, his imprisonment in the Japanese POW camp at Cabanatuan, and his deep love of and dependence on his wife Louise, who still lives.

The book also tells stories about all the officers of the 26th Cavalry (PS) who fought, died, or were executed in the Philippines, the handful of cavalry officers who survived, and stories about Fleeger's many officer and enlisted friends.

John Bradley, a West Pointer like Harry Fleeger and a retired Army officer, spent World War II in the civilian POW Camp in Santo Tomas University in Manila. He wrote this book after he reviewed the letters and diaries of Major Harry Fleeger because he believed that Fleeger's story needed to be told.

Bradley taught military history at West Point, and he has taught American History and/or military history at the University of Houston-Downtown and The Glasscock School of Continuing Studies at Rice University. He continues to teach.
